

An Introduction to Sustainable Events

What sustainable events mean to Informa:

As a major organiser of events and exhibitions, we have the opportunity and the responsibility to lead the sustainable development of our industry.

Our attendees, investors and our colleagues are all clearly telling us that sustainability, socially, economically and environmentally, is something that is no longer a nice to have but a necessary part of our success.

We also have the potential to go further than our responsibility to deliver our events sustainably: we can design our events to provide a place to work in partnership with our customers and inspire the sustainable development of the industries we serve. Through this, we have the potential to help foster the connections needed to deliver a sustainable future across a much wider reach.

Events that consider focused sustainability benefit from increased innovation, cost savings, enriched content, higher customer satisfaction and enhanced reputation. We have developed the Informa Sustainable Events Management System (ISEMS) to enable every one of our events to embed sustainability.

What is a sustainable event?

At Informa, we have three aims for delivering a sustainable event.

To achieve these three aims, we have identified six key areas of focus:

Inspiring Sustainable Development

This is about both the sustainability of the industry the event serves through our content and partnerships, as well as how we inspire our attendees, exhibitors and event teams to deliver a sustainable event.

Examples include incorporating content in the event that's relevant to the sustainability development of the industry, sustainable innovation awards, programs to support new talent, sustainability information on event websites, and exhibitor sustainability checklist.

Setting the standard with the Fundamentals

The Fundamentals are a 12-point checklist that gives all events a way to measure themselves against our stakeholders' expectations around sustainability.

The framework was designed to give specific direction at the same time as providing freedom for events to adapt for their markets and their local community

Over time, particularly as we progress towards our 2025 targets, we'll increase the level of ambition within the Fundamentals to move all of our events towards greater sustainability. We believe there are so many opportunities to engage with customers, develop new revenue streams, save money and create engaging content – by leading on sustainability in our industry, and theirs.
